Human Rights Scope and Context

The scope and context of Bank BCA's human rights is in accordance with the scope of its business operations in the financial services industry, which includes human rights related to civil and political rights, basic labor rights, human rights related to banking business, partners or supply chain, as well as community empowerment.

With regard to Civil and Political Rights, BCA is committed to ensure all Company personnel to have the freedom to take part in social and/or political process, as stipulated in the Corporate Governance Manual of PT Bank Central Asia Tbk. Employees are important assets for BCA, thus the company is committed to paying attention to basic labor rights, such as fulfillment of employee remuneration and welfare, social protection, career development, non-discriminatory practices in the workplace, gender equality, and occupational health and safety aspects. In addition, the right to associate and assemble, as well as the right to collective bargaining, are also basic labor rights at BCA.

BCA's commitment to human rights is closely related to the bank's business activities in channeling funding to debtors in the form of loans, or to other parties in the form of investments, and other forms, as well as developing banking products and services. As a form of BCA's human rights commitment, BCA encourages debtors and other parties where the bank's funds are placed to minimize the negative impact on human rights on their stakeholders, especially employees and the public. This has become BCA's concern, because the occurrence of an incident or violation of human rights can cause the bank's reputational risk and also increase the financing risk.

Furthermore, BCA pays attention to human rights in its relations with partners or supply chain. BCA encourages partners or supply chain to pay attention to human rights, particularly those related to labor rights. This is important because often human rights violations will increase the operational risk of business partners or supply chain, which in turn have an impact on their performance risks to produce products and services for BCA.

Furthermore, BCA is committed to fulfilling human rights through community empowerment activities under the umbrella of Bakti BCA. Community empowerment activities are one of the approaches and efforts to fulfill human rights aspect, particularly in the context of community socio-economic rights.
